

Correct. Draw the angle in standard position: it has its initial side on the x -axis and, because it is negative, moves clockwise to the terminal side. The terminal side is in the fourth quadrant. Now the terminal side and the x -axis form the "same" angle as the original, but a reference angle is never negative. So the reference angle is 50° .