You may have thought that the effect of subtracting a constant from the input was to shift the graph of the original function to the left, but actually it will shift to the right. So the graph of $y = \cos\left(\theta - \dfrac{\pi}{2}\right)$ will be the same as the graph of sine, which is not the graph shown.