

Correct. When you plug the (x, y) values of these points into the x and y variables in the inequalities, a true statement is produced. If you were to graph these inequalities, the points that solve the first inequality would appear in the shaded region for the first inequality. Likewise, the points that solve the second inequality would appear in the shaded region for the second inequality.