

Correct. You can isolate a variable by using inverse operations to first remove other terms in the expression and then to clear the coefficient of the variable. As long as the same operations are done to both sides of the equation, equality is maintained.