

The set of integers includes the whole numbers plus their negative counterparts, all of which can be represented as rational numbers in the form  $\frac{p}{q}$  where  $p$  and  $q$  are integers. Can an irrational number be represented in this way?