Look at the following inequality:

"For all real numbers $b, |b + 2| \geq 2b$"

Which range of values for b can be used to show that the statement is not always true?