

Incorrect. Since the first ball is removed and not replaced, there are only 9 balls left when the second ball is chosen. How many red balls are left if the first ball is red? What is the probability that the second ball is red in this case?