

A system of two linear equations can only have multiple solutions if the equations of the lines are the same. Can this happen if they have different slopes?