Incorrect. Deductive reasoning is the process of using known facts to make logical conclusions that you know must be true. Although Tran may be able to predict the next terms in the pattern, he does not know them for certain; the absence of facts in this case mean that it is not an example of deductive reasoning.