

When multiplying any number by 100, move the decimal point two places to the right. If you multiplied a whole number by 100 you would add two zeros on the end, because that would be the same thing as moving the decimal point. However, 475.2 is not a whole number. The correct answer is 47,520.