

The absolute value of a number can never be negative. It is the distance between the number's place on the number line and 0. Distance is always positive or 0.