

The second statement is true, but the first statement is false. Absolute value will change a negative to a positive and leave a positive number alone. It is the distance between a number's place on the number line and 0, so absolute value is always positive or 0.