

Incorrect. The absolute value of a number r is always positive or zero. If the original number is negative, its absolute value is that number without the negative sign.