If you had a system that led to an impossible equation, such as $0 = 1$, then there would be no solution. If you substitute $1 - 5x$ for y in the first equation and then simplify, you will end up with the equation $10x = 10x$. This equation is true regardless of the value of x. The correct answer is that there are an infinite number of solutions.