

If the graphs were the same line, then every point on the line would be a solution. This would mean that there would be an infinite number of solutions to the system. But when you end up with a false equation such as $1 = 0$, the system does not have any solutions.