

You may have thought that a system of equations should have one solution. However, correctly eliminating variables should give you a false statement setting 0 equal to some other number. The correct answer is that there is no solution to this system.