

Incorrect. Solve each system of equations by eliminating variables through multiplication and addition. If after adding you get the statement  $0 = 0$  for two sets of equations in the system, there are an infinite number of solutions. If you get a false statement that sets 0 equal to any other number, then there are no solutions to the system. If you find a value for each variable, then there is one solution to the system.