

You may have thought that a system of equations should have one solution. However, correctly eliminating variables should give you a statement such as $0 = 8$. When the system leads to an equation with no variables, there will either be no solution or an infinite number of solutions.