There are three variables: volume, base area, and height. Because the volume depends on the other two measurements, it is an example of joint variation.