

Even though the red line intersects the graph only once, because it is horizontal it demonstrates nothing about the graph representing a function. It is the vertical line test that determines whether a graph represents a function. In fact, this graph is not a function because a vertical line drawn to the left of the  $y$ -axis will intersect the graph at two points.