

The graph gets closer and closer to the y -axis, increases as the input increases, and curves downward. This is the general shape of the graph of any logarithm. The given graph passes through $(4, 0)$. You can check without using a calculator to see that this is a point on the graph of $f(x) = \ln 0.25x$. Other points can be checked with a calculator.