

The food section is larger than the loans section, and it is larger than the savings section, but it is not larger than those two sections combined. This means that Charlie does not spend more on food than on loans and savings combined. The correct answer is that housing is the largest percent of Charlie's budget.