

You may have looked only at the first couple of data points for each city and noticed that Austin had more cloudy days than San Diego. However, you must list the data for each city in order from least to greatest. Then calculate the mean of the middle two data points to find the median of each set.