

A histogram is best used for something like the results of a test for an entire class (that is, when you are given a collection of numbers that can be grouped into intervals, and you want to see how the numbers are spread out). It cannot be used to compare the individual numbers in the data set because it does not show the individual numbers.