

Incorrect. When working with probability, a random action is called a trial. An outcome is any possible result of the trial. An event is a particular collection of outcomes; it is the outcome(s) whose probability you are hoping to find.