A stem-and-leaf plot, which organizes the data by separating the digits of the numbers, would allow the teacher to see how many attendees she had by decade. That is, the graph would let her see at a glance how many students were less than 10, 10 to 19, 20 to 29, etc. This gives a very clear distribution by age.